

Linking interpersonal childhood adversity to mental health: A scoping review of trust, mentalizing, agency and interpersonal emotion regulation

Ritika Chokhani<sup>1*</sup>, Alex Lloyd<sup>1</sup>, Essi Viding<sup>1</sup>, Mattia Gerin<sup>2</sup>, Eamon McCrory<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Division of Psychology and Language Sciences, University College London, United Kingdom

<sup>2</sup>Pontifical Catholic University of Chile, Chile

Childhood adversity is associated with higher distrust, higher uncertainty about mental states, lower sense of control and lower use of interpersonal emotion regulation, which in turn may increase risk for poor mental health.

Methodologically, there is a need for more precise construct definition, more longitudinal studies and more studies using behavioural and neural measures to enable us to draw further conclusions about the role of these mechanisms in socially-mediated pathways from interpersonal childhood adversity to mental health.

*Correspondence to:
Ritika Chokhani
ritika.chokhani.14@ucl.ac.uk

References and digital copy

Funding
RC is supported by a PhD studentship from the Wellcome Trust (218497/Z/19/Z)